United International College:

Located in the southern seacoast of Guangdong Province, Zhuhai, meaning pearl and sea, got its name for sitting at the estuary where the Pearl River flows into the sea. The college's roots stem from Beijing Normal University and Hong Kong Baptist University. When these two nationally recognized institutions collaborated to create United International College—the result was Mainland China's first liberal arts college since the education reform in 2003. With English as the main language of instruction and administration at UIC, exchange students are able to take their courses in English while also taking an introductory course in Chinese language and culture.

The campus is home to about 4500 students (and growing) from all over China and the world, and enrollment has almost tripled since the college opened its doors in 2005.

Courses:

The UIC/Gustavus Adolphus Program in China is a one-to-one exchange program. UIC encourages exchange students to take a full course load, which includes three classes that the student chooses, and one Chinese language and culture class. The courses include, but are not limited to: International Journalism, Social Work, Teaching Language as a Second Language, Cinema and Television, Environmental Science, Computer Science and Technology, Accounting, and Applied Economics. UIC is continually expanding their course options, and new this year is the Food Science and Engineering Program.
