After which she attended MacPhail School of Music in Minneapolis, Minnesota where she earned a Master of Music in 1937. Over the years she continued her education with two diplomas from the Université de Clermont-Ferrand in France in 1923 and 1924 and a scholarship from the Conservatoire de Musique in Lyon, France in 1924-1925. She also studied around the world at the Universidad de Mexico in Mexico City in 1942, a study seminar in Germany during the summer of 1964, Greece in March 1973, Israel in July 1973, and the Institut de Langue et de Littérature Françaises at the Université de Rennes in France during the summers of 1970-1972.

Next, at Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts she was an assistant professor of French from 1936-1948, and was also the resident director of the French Language House from 1943-1948. Lind then became the Associate in Higher Education for the American Association of University Women in Washington, D.C. from 1948-1950.
